

Migration, Migration Routes, and National Resistances in the Balkans

Migration has become a defining issue shaping national identities, politics, and social dynamics in the Balkans today. In this context, it has been deemed appropriate to prepare a research book called "Migration, Migration Routes and National Resistances in the Balkans", which is planned to be published by Gaziantep University Institute for Migration through Gaziantep University Publishing House, which has the status of an international publishing house. This book plans to provide a comprehensive analysis of the complex relationship between migration, migration routes and national resistances in the region. Authors who are experts in many disciplines such as political science, sociology, geography, anthropology, and history are expected to investigate the historical, social, economic and political factors that reveal migration patterns in the Balkans and the impact of these models on the resilience of national communities. It will also explore the challenges and opportunities that migration creates for Balkan societies and states, and the strategies developed by national governments and regional organizations to overcome these challenges. Through case studies and comparative analysis, the book will shed light on how migration has transformed the Balkans and how nations have adapted and responded to these changes. Considered to be an up-to-date and guiding resource, this book will be essential for academics, policy makers, and anyone who wants to understand the complexity of migration and national resistances in the Balkans.
